

NORTH CAROLINA "A Good Place to Live"

Scenic Waterways

THESE inland sounds to which reference has been made cover 3,600 square miles. Bays, lakes and numerous navigable rivers add to the State's scenic charm.

Not only is the State favored with coastal sounds and with several of the largest purely inland lakes in eastern America that had their origin in the dim past and are the handiworks of nature, but it also has mountain lakes of no mean magnitude. Pamlico, Currituck and Albemarle sounds on the east are nationally known for boating, swimming and other aquatic sports, while White Lake, Lake Waccamaw and other inland bodies have excited admiration on the part of thousands of visitors and are scenes of outings for parties who engage in boating and swimming for many months in each year.

In the West, nestled among the mountains, we have Lake Lure, Lake James, (7,500 acres) and Tahoma (3,500 acres), which have attracted wide attention. In addition to these, there are numerous other smaller mountain lakes, leaping waterfalls and rippling streams abounding with game fish and affording pleasure grounds for lovers of the great out-of-doors.

Shooting on the sounds of the east is a sport engaged in not only by North Carolina people but also by visitors from all over the country. Included in parties visiting these shooting grounds annually might be mentioned the names of persons of national and international reputation. Both streams and lakes of North Carolina are kept stocked with fish and under new regulations governing fish and game, every safeguard will be thrown about them, in order that ethical sportsmen may enjoy them to the fullest extent.
